

Iran

After the 2009 Elections:

Domestic, Regional and International Dimensions

A Symposium at the University of Maryland

A daylong symposium at the University of Maryland will bring together a stellar roster of experts and specialists, primarily academics and journalists, to discuss the domestic, regional and international implications of the election. Because of its worldwide significance, the issue of Iran's nuclear program will also be a focal point of the symposium's deliberations.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 2009
9 A.M.-3:30 P.M.

Orem Hall
Samuel Riggs IV Alumni Center
Stadium Drive
University of Maryland, College Park

Welcome

9-9:15 A.M.

Speaker:

Nariman Farvardin, Provost,
University of Maryland

The Election and Its Aftermath

9:15-10:45 A.M.

Speakers:

Suzanne Maloney, Brookings Institution
Robin Wright, U.S. Institute of Peace
Steve Kull, Program on International Policy Attitudes

Moderator:

Ahmad Karimi-Hakkak,
University of Maryland

Iran's Nuclear Program, Then and Now

11 A.M.-12:30 P.M.

Speakers:

Trita Parsi, National Iranian
American Council
James Walsh, Massachusetts Institute of Technology
Gary Sick, Columbia University

Moderator:

Shibley Telhami, University of Maryland

Iran's Regional Position

2-3:30 P.M.

Speakers:

Abbas Milani, Stanford University
Shibley Telhami, University of Maryland
Karim Sadjadpour, Carnegie
Endowment for International Peace

Moderator:

Kevin Klose, University of Maryland

WWW.UMD.EDU/IRANSYMPOSIUM

Presented by: The Roshan Center for Persian Studies and The Sadat Chair for Peace and Development. Co-sponsored by: The School of Languages, Literatures and Cultures, the College of Arts and Humanities and the Philip Merrill College of Journalism.

